While most fans will be satisfied with the addition of new stadiums, new head-to-head gameplay modes and the now-standard FIFA 22 Ultimate Experience, a number of new features have been added to FIFA 18 that may help to improve the overall gameplay experience. The most visible change is the new "Real Player Motion" animation system. This augmentation of the standard player models has been improved across the board, and in its debut year of use, a number of complaints have been addressed. New to FIFA 22 is the Player Motion System, which uses real-life player motion captured from competitions in motion capture suits. The company used for the capture, Motion Capturing Studios, began implementing the system in previous games, but with "HyperMotion," it's included in the game since the beginning. According to the FUT Team Website, the system "uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power gameplay." Although "HyperMotion" has been around since 2015, this is the first FIFA title with the feature. The good news is that this iteration seems to deliver on the system's advertised capabilities. Using real player motion is a new technology, so there are some ups and downs. I thought that the animations were superior to the Legacy animations, and thought that the animations overall were unique and looked great. However, some players were decidedly flat, and the animations of the players seemed strange. As time goes on, more animations will be revealed, and in the first year of use, the overall system is improving. HyperMotion Technology The most conspicuous change in FIFA 22 is the new "HyperMotion" animation system. When the system was first announced, many fans and critics reacted with hostility toward the addition of this new animation technology. When the game launched, the majority of fans were not happy with the system. The thing is, the animations had improved for the last 10 years. In FIFA 15, the legacy animations were dated, and felt as if the player model had been frozen in that frame. The player models in FIFA 16 looked a bit better and moved a bit better, but overall, the animations were a bit stiff. Something began happening with the addition of the animation technology, however.
